Table 7

Five Kinds of Unawareness of Emotion Experience

Type of unawareness	Characteristics	Examples
Subject is world-focused.	Not aware of emotion as own state.	Everyday cases of world-focused emotion experience.
	Clinically unimportant unless state is longterm.	Clinical extreme in anger disorders.
Detachment: reduced emotion	Diminished emotion / diminished hedonic	Intellectualization.
phenomenology.	quality of experience.	Possibly ventro-medial pre-frontal damage.
Restricted modulation of analytic	Inability to attend analytically to emotion	Infants; possibly alexithymics.
mode of attention: undifferentiated	experience. Not aware of aspects of such emotion experience.	experience as discrete experiential entities.
Deficient 2nd-order awareness.	Emotion experience inaccessible to awareness	Clinically relevant population of 'repressors'.
Attention impaired or deviated ('repression').	(and to report).	Parachutists studied by Fenz and Epstein (1967).
		Developmental trauma leading to problem in representation of sel
Lack of categorical-emotion experience.	Emotion phenomenology not experienced	Everyday cases of lack of categorical-emotion experience.
Passive: lack of category.	as emotion or not as specific emotion	Clinical extreme in panic attacks; case of Pearson Brack.
Active: misinterpretation		Category not applicable to self: some cases of anger disorder.
		Lack of category in individual and culture: e.g. 'fago' in Ifaluk.