
Hypertext in Context

Cliff McKnight,
Principal Scientist, HUSAT Research Institute, Loughborough University
Andrew Dillon,
Senior Project Officer, HUSAT Research Institute, Loughborough University
John Richardson,
Senior Project Officer, HUSAT Research Institute, Loughborough University

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge

New York Port Chester Melbourne Sydney

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	ix
Chapter 1: How Did We Get Here?	1
Introduction	1
What is hypertext?	2
Why is hypertext important?	5
Hypertext historical highlights	6
Overview of the book	12
Chapter 2: Linearity and Hypertext	15
The promise of hypertext?	15
Linearity	16
Orality and literacy — the medium shapes the message	18
The oral organisation of knowledge	18
The character of writing	21
Contemporary perspectives on literacy	22
The evolution of writing — from record to resource	25
The printed book	32
The implications for hypertext	38
Chapter 3: Users, Tasks and Information	43
Introduction	43
The user as reader	45
The psychology of reading	45
Reading from screens	48
Conclusion	50
Classifying information types	50
Conclusion	54
Reading as an information manipulation task	54
The diversity of reading tasks	55
Observing task performance	56
Evidence for task effects	57
Conclusion	58
Understanding hypertext in terms of user, task and information interactions	58
Hypertext versus paper	59

Hypertext versus linear electronic text	61
Hypertext versus hypertext	62
Conclusions	63
Chapter 4: Navigation Through Complex Information Spaces	65
Is navigation a problem?	65
The psychology of navigation	67
Schemata and models of generic environments	67
The acquisition of cognitive maps	68
Conclusions	70
Navigation applied to paper documents	70
Schemata and models	70
Acquiring a cognitive map of the text	72
Navigation applied to electronic documents	75
Schemata and models	75
Acquiring a cognitive map of the electronic space	77
Acquiring a cognitive map of a hypertext document	78
Providing navigational information: browsers, maps and structural cues	79
The provision of metaphors	81
Navigating the semantic space	85
Conclusion	86
Chapter 5: Creating Hypertext	87
Introduction	87
The conversion of text into hypertext	88
Text access frequencies	89
Electronic versions	89
The nature of the transformation	90
Text mark-up	90
The creation of original hypertexts	92
The characteristics of extended prose arguments	93
The hypertext network or 'web of facts'	94
The fallacy of simple networks as 'ideal' representations of knowledge	98
From chaos to order, from order to understanding?	100
Exploration	101
Organisation	101
Writing	102
Conclusion	103

Chapter 6: Hypertext, Learning and Education	105
Introduction	105
Evaluating learning in hypertext	112
Lineal versus non-lineal thinking	112
Learning support environments	113
Semantic nets and web learning	115
Learner individuality	118
Incidental learning	119
Does hypertext have a rôle to play in learning and education?	120
Chapter 7: The Hypertext Database : A Case Study	123
System specification: understanding the users, tasks and information space	124
The users	124
The task	124
The information space	125
The structure of the database	126
The database front-end	127
The structure of the articles	129
Testing the design	132
Conclusion	133
Chapter 8: Where Do We Go From Here?	135
New extensions	135
Computer supported collaborative work	135
Intelligent hypertext	137
Developments needed	137
Experience	137
Software tools	138
Hypertext in context: what have we learned?	139
Glossary	141
References	149
Author Index	159
Subject Index	163