Monitoring and Indicators of Forest Biodiversity in Europe – From Ideas to Operationality

Marco Marchetti (ed.)

EFI Proceedings No. 51, 2004

SUB Göttingen 7
218 923 325

European Forest Institute

IUFRO Unit 8.07.01
IUFRO Unit 4.02.05
IUFRO Unit 4.02.06

European Environment Agency

Joint Research Centre (JRC)

Ministero della Politiche Agricole e Forestali – Corpo Forestale dello Stato

Accademia Italiana di Scienze Forestali

University of Florence

Contents

Pinborg, U.	Preface – Ideas on Emerging User Needs to Assess Forest Biodiversity	7
Marchetti, M.	Introduction	9
	Session 1: Emerging User Needs and Pressures on Forest Biodiversity
De Heer et al.	Biodiversity Trends and Threats in Europe – Can We Apply a Generic Biodiversity Indicator to Forests?	15
Linser, S.	The MCPFE's Work on Biodiversity	27
Schuck, A. and Rois, M.	Forest Biodiversity Indicators – A Contribution to an EEA Core Set of Biodiversity Indicators	37
Schuck et al.	Forest Biodiversity Indicator: Dead Wood – A Proposed Approach towards Operationalising the MCPFE Indicator	49
Humphrey, J.W. and Watts, K.	Biodiversity Indicators for UK Managed Forests: Development and Implementation at Different Spatial Scales	79
Estreguil et al.	JRC Contribution to Reporting Needs of EC Nature and Forest Policies	91
	Session 2: Forest Classification and Assessment Strategies
Barbati, A. and Marchetti, M.	Forest Types for Biodiversity Assessment (FTBAs) in Europe: the Revised Classification Scheme	105
Bradshaw, R.H.W. and Møller, P.F.	European Forest Types for Biodiversity Assessment – A Qualitative Approach	127
Norddahl Kirsch, M.M. and Bradshaw, R.H.W.	European Forest Types for Biodiversity Assessment – Quantitative Approaches	135
Corona et al.	Stand-level Forest Type Approach in Italy: Experiences from the Last Twenty Years	143
Rego et al.	Combination of Structural and Compositional Factors for Describing Forest Types Using National Forest Inventory Data	153
Ciancio, O. and Nocentini, S.	Biodiversity Conservation in Mediterranean Forest Ecosystems: from Theory to Operationality	163

Session 3: Stand-Level Indicators: Dead Wood

Montes et al. Characterisation of Coarse Woody Debris in Two Scots Pine Forests in Spain 171

Hahn, K. and Christensen, M. Dead Wood in European Forest Reserves – A Reference for Forest Management 181

Humphrey et al. Deadwood as an Indicator of Biodiversity in European Forests: From Theory to Operational Guidance 193

Stokland et al. Development of Dead Wood Indicators for Biodiversity Monitoring: Experiences from Scandinavia 207

Session 4: Stand-Level Indicators: The Heterotrophic Phase

Christensen et al. Wood-inhabiting Fungi as Indicators of Nature Value in European Beech Forests 229

Dodelin, B. and Lempérière, G Estimating the Heterotrophic Phase in Alpine Forests 239

Sim-Sim et al. Diversity of Bryophytes – Useful Indicators of Madeira Laurel Forest Conservation 247

Pontégnie et al. On the Interest of Litter-Dwelling Invertebrates to Assess Silvicultural Impact on Forest Biodiversity 259

Garcia et al. Epiphytic Bryophytes and Lichens in Quercus rotundifolia Lam. Woodlands of Portugal and their Value as Ecological Indicators 271

Session 5: Forest Indicator Development at Landscape Level

Agnoletti, M. Cultural Landscapes and Biodiversity: A Case Study Suggesting a Different Approach In Conservation Strategies in Italy 287

Angelstam, P. and Törnblom, J. Maintaining Forest Biodiversity in Actual Landscapes – European Gradients in History and Governance Systems as a "Landscape Lab" 299

Koch, B. and Ivits, E. Results from the Project BioAssess – Relation Between Remote Sensing and Terrestrial Derived Biodiversity Indicators 315

Maggi et al. Implementing Indicators for Forest Monitoring within Alpine Natura 2000 Sites 333

La Mela Veca et al. Spatial Analysis of Natural and Semi-natural Habitats of the Natura 2000 Network in the Sicani Mountains (W Sicily, Italy) 343

Hirata et al. Extracting Forest Patch Attributes at the Landscape Level Using New Remote Sensing Techniques – An Integrated Approach of High-Resolution Satellite Data, Airborne Lidar Data and GIS Data for Forest Conservation 359

Casanova, P. and Memoli, A. Birds and Mammals as Indicators of Changes in Biodiversity in Italy 369

Session 6: Methods for Data Collection and Evolution of Monitoring Schemes

Chirici, G. Ecological Multicriteria Evaluation as Fuzzy Prior Probability Supporting Forest Type Mapping on a Regional Scale 381

Mayer et al. Baselines of Biodiversity – the Plant Species Richness of Natural Forests as a Target for Nature Conservation 393

Sechi et al. A Monitoring Network of Cork Oak Decline in Sardinia, Italy to Establish Control Strategies 405

Haußmann, T. and Fischer, R. The Forest Monitoring Programme of ICP Forests – A Contribution to Biodiversity Monitoring 413

Kovac et al. A Methodological Approach for the Improvement of Biodiversity Monitoring and Management 421

Luque et al. Multi-Source Forest Inventory Data for Biodiversity Monitoring and Planning at the Forest Landscape Level 431

Petriccione, B. First Results of the ICP Forests Biodiversity Test-Phase in Italy 445

Pileri, P. and Sartori, F. Monitoring Biodiversity at a Wide Land Scale to Support Sustainable Planning and Policy: The Proposal of a Key Indicator Based on Vegetation Cover Data Deriving from Maps 455

Session 7: Human Influence on Biodiversity

van der Sluis et al. Towards Biodiversity Assessment for Boreal Forests in the Pechora River Basin (Russian Federation) 467

Barbera et al. Agroforestry Systems of Mt Etna, Italy: Biodiversity Analysis at Landscape, Stand and Specific Level 481

Toivanen et al. Effects of Management and Restoration on Forest Biodiversity: An Experimental Approach 493

Viedma et al. Factors Controlling the Spatio-Temporal Dynamics of a Forested Landscape Affected by Fire in Central Spain 505

La Mantia, T. and Pasta, S. The Sicilian Phanerophytes: Still a Noteworthy Patrimony, Soon a Lost Resource? 515