

Mortuary practices and social identities in the Middle Ages

Essays in burial archaeology in honour of Heinrich Härke

edited by
Duncan Sayer and Howard Williams

UNIVERSITY of
EXETER
PRESS

Contents

List of figures	vii
Preface	xi
1. 'Halls of mirrors': death and identity in medieval archaeology Howard Williams and Duncan Sayer	1
2. Working with the dead Robert Chapman	23
3. Beowulf and British prehistory Richard Bradley	38
4. Fighting wars, gaining status: on the rise of Germanic elites Stefan Burmeister	46
5. 'Hunnic' modified skulls: physical appearance, identity and the transformative nature of migrations Susanne Hakenbeck	64
6. Rituals to free the spirit – or what the cremation pyre told Karen Høilund Nielsen	81
7. Barrows, roads and ridges – or where to bury the dead? The choice of burial grounds in late Iron Age Scandinavia Eva S. Thäte	104

8. Anglo-Saxon DNA? Catherine Hills	123
9. Laws, funerals and cemetery organisation: the seventh-century Kentish family Duncan Sayer	141
10. On display: envisioning the early Anglo-Saxon dead Howard Williams	170
11. Variation in the British burial rite: AD 400–700 David Petts	207
12. Anglo-Saxon attitudes: how should post-AD 700 burials be interpreted? Grenville Astill	222
13. Rethinking later medieval masculinity: the male body in death Roberta Gilchrist	236
Bibliography	253
Index	298
List of contributors	303