

Review of: "Are non-native speakers' English pronunciation similar?: Evidence through PRAAT recording software"

Warda Nejari¹

¹ Radboud University of Nijmegen

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This study adds no new knowledge to the study of non-nativeness, accentedness in any manner. The fact that the researchers 'proves' that accentedness varies across speaker groups is an extremely well-known fact, and I do not understand what the added value is of this paper beyond achieving a publication. I was asked to review this paper by Qeios, but I do not see why. The author can better focus on achieving basic knowledge on (non-)native accentedness (in English) and find experienced researchers who can help with more relevant research.