

THE IMPACT OF ELECTRICITY

DEVELOPMENT, DESIRES AND DILEMMAS

Tanja Winther

Berghahn Books
NEW YORK • OXFORD

CONTENTS

List of illustrations	xi
Acknowledgements	xiii
List of abbreviations	xv
Chapter 1: Introduction	1
Towards an anthropology of energy	2
Addressing development	3
Research questions	4
The choice of an untypical village	5
Electricity matters	6
What sort of good is electricity?	8
Fieldwork and ethical considerations	9
Learning ‘the art of conversation’	12
An outline of the book	17
Chapter 2: Powers of the past	22
The people and the place	22
The colonial period	28
The post-revolution era	42
Chapter 3: The Rural Electrification Project (RUREL)	49
Objectives: improve health facilities, create modern villagers and ensure Zanzibar’s future income	50
The impact of international environmental discourses	52
Political difficulties: the project interrupted	54
Public services dramatically improved	55
Household connections, tourism and productivity	59
A summary of the immediate effects of electricity’s arrival	62
Chapter 4: Electrifying Uroa	65
Uroa becomes connected	66
The significance of a meal	67

A passion for meetings	69
Women's limited role in the process	69
Creativity and capability – participation practised	71
The limits to local control	73
Finding equivalence	74
Explaining conflict and resistance	76
Development as a political matter	79
Chapter 5: Discourses of development	84
Unreliable markets	86
The generation of money in Uroa	89
Education as an icon of development	93
Religious, modern Zanzibar	95
Television Zanzibar (TVZ)	97
Towards increasing difference	99
Chapter 6: The electricity company in the village	104
Linked to the developed world	105
Entering private space	108
Measuring proper behaviour	111
Payment time: humbleness and resistance	113
The consumption of electricity: a high awareness of the cost	117
Problems caused by the accounting system	119
Disconnection	121
Striving to behave like modern customers	122
Chapter 7: Uroa by night	129
Light as a marker of power	130
The aesthetics of darkness	135
Security light	136
Demographic changes, men, and their houses	139
Speeding up life – consequence and ideal?	144
Uroa transformed	146
Chapter 8: Introducing objects of desire	148
Strategies for obtaining electrical appliances	149
Women's wealth	155
Explaining women's exclusion from the ownership of appliances	160
Putting yourself at risk	161
Normalisation: balancing equality and difference	165

Chapter 9: Reorganising interior space	168
Relaxing in Uroa	168
The home as a stage	170
Reorganising space and social relationships	174
Encapsulating the family	182
Chapter 10: Negotiating tastes in food	188
Cooking with electricity	188
Zanzibari tastes	190
Food as a social marker	192
A cook's technologies and concerns	198
Taste and conflicting discourses	205
Food and body	208
Tastes at rest, tastes in flux	212
Chapter 11: Electricity makes a difference	217
What does electricity promise?	217
Electric networks in their creation	219
Electrification and human well-being	223
Environmentally sustainable development	227
Are kinship relations losing significance?	229
Negotiating gender relationships	230
Electrified worries and the need to get in control	233
'You don't tell someone with a bike to buy himself a car!'	236
Glossary of Swahili terms	241
Bibliography	243
References	243
Reports	250
Archival sources (Zanzibar National Archives)	251
Index	253