

The Myth of Digital Democracy

Matthew Hindman

Contents

List of Illustrations ix

Acknowledgments xi

One The Internet and the “Democratization” of Politics 1

Democratization and Political Voice 4

A Different Critique 8

Gatekeeping, Filtering, and Infrastructure 12

The Difference between Speaking and Being Heard 16

Two The Lessons of Howard Dean 20

The Liberal Medium? 21

“Big Mo’ ” Meets the Internet 26

The Internet and the Infrastructure of Politics 27

The End of the Beginning 34

Three “Googlearchy”: The Link Structure of Political Web Sites 38

What Link Structure Can Tell Political Scientists 41

The Link Structure of Online Political Communities 45

Site Visibility and the Emergence of Googlearchy 54

The Politics of Winners-Take-All 56

Four Political Traffic and the Politics of Search 58

The Big Picture 60

Traffic Demographics 67

	Search Engines and (the Lack of) User Sophistication	68
	What Users Search For	70
	Search Engine Agreement	78
	How Wide a Gate?	80
Five	Online Concentration	82
	Barriers to Entry	83
	Distribution, Not Production	86
	Online Concentration	90
	Comparative Data, Comparative Metrics	91
	A Narrower Net	99
Six	Blogs: The New Elite Media	102
	Blogs Hit the Big Time	103
	Bloggers and the Media	105
	So You Want to Be a Blogger	113
	Blogger Census	118
	Bloggers and Op-Ed Columnists	125
	Rhetoric and Reality	127
Seven	Elite Politics and the “Missing Middle”	129
	The Limits of Online Politics	131
	A Narrower Net	133
	Political Organizing and the Missing Middle	139
	New Technology, Old Failures	141
Appendix	On Data and Methodology	143
	Support Vector Machine Classifiers	143
	Surfer Behavior and Crawl Depth	150
	Hitwise’s Data and Methodology	151
	References	155
	Index	173