

THE POSTCOLONIAL UNCONSCIOUS

The Postcolonial Unconscious is a major attempt to reconstruct the whole field of postcolonial studies. In this magisterial and, at times, polemical study, Neil Lazarus argues that the key critical concepts that form the very foundation of the field need to be reassessed and questioned. Drawing on a vast range of literary sources, Lazarus investigates works and authors from Latin America and the Caribbean, Africa and the Arab world, South, South East, and East Asia, to reconsider them from a postcolonial perspective. Alongside this, he offers bold new readings of some of the most influential figures in the field: Fredric Jameson, Edward Said, and Frantz Fanon. A tour de force of postcolonial studies, this book will set the agenda for the future, probing how the field has come to develop in the directions it has, and why and how it can grow further.

NEIL LAZARUS is Professor of English and Comparative Literary Studies at the University of Warwick. He has published extensively in postcolonial studies and critical social and cultural theory. Previous books include Resistance in Postcolonial African Fiction (1990) and Nationalism and Cultural Practice in the Postcolonial World (1999). He is the editor of The Cambridge Companion to Postcolonial Literary Studies (2004) and co-editor of Marxism, Modernity and Postcolonial Studies (2002).

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-18626-1 - The Postcolonial Unconscious
Neil Lazarus
Frontmatter
More information

THE POSTCOLONIAL UNCONSCIOUS

NEIL LAZARUS

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press
 978-0-521-18626-1 - The Postcolonial Unconscious
 Neil Lazarus
 Frontmatter
More information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
 Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town,
 Singapore, São Paulo, Delhi, Tokyo, Mexico City
 Cambridge University Press
 The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org
 Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521186261

© Neil Lazarus 2011

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2011

Printed in the United Kingdom at the University Press, Cambridge

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Lazarus, Neil, 1953–
 The postcolonial unconscious / Neil Lazarus.
 p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-1-107-00656-0 – ISBN 978-0-521-18626-1 (pbk.) 1. Postcolonialism in literature.
 2. Postcolonialism and the arts. 3. Literature, Modern–20th century–History and criticism–
 Theory, etc. 4. Developing countries–Literatures–History and criticism–Theory, etc. I. Title.
 PN56.P555L39 2011
 809'.04–dc22

2011001068

ISBN 978-1-107-00656-0 Hardback
 ISBN 978-0-521-18626-1 Paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-18626-1 - The Postcolonial Unconscious
Neil Lazarus
Frontmatter
More information

For all my family, inherited and acquired

Contents

Acknowledgements	page viii
Introduction: The political unconscious of postcolonial studies	i
1 The politics of postcolonial modernism	21
2 Fredric Jameson on 'Third-World Literature': a defence	89
3 'A figure glimpsed in a rear-view mirror': the question of representation in 'postcolonial' fiction	114
4 Frantz Fanon after the 'postcolonial prerogative'	161
5 The battle over Edward Said	183
Notes	204
Works cited	260
Index	290

Acknowledgements

As many of my friends and colleagues already know, I've been beset by illness over the latter half of this decade of the 'noughties'. When I first began writing this book, my expectation was that it would be ready for publication by the end of 2007. It didn't turn out that way. But the truth is that the book in its current form is not simply a delayed version of the one that would have been published if I had not fallen ill. I have benefited from the opportunity provided by periods of enforced inactivity to read more widely and to think some of my ideas through more deeply.

In a strict sense, therefore, I ought to begin by thanking all of the medical personnel – surgeons, specialists, consultants, doctors, nursing staff, administrators – with whom I have come into contact over the course of the past five years, in a rather large number of hospitals in London (and one in Málaga!). Certainly, I will not hear a word said against the British National Health Service. Without a socialised medical care system, I would have been broke, for sure, and quite possibly dead also.

Many of the ideas in this book have been tried out in lectures that I have given over the past several years. I would like to thank all the colleagues who have invited me to speak on these occasions, and who have been so welcoming and so supportive and encouraging in their feedback: David Attwell, Neil Badmington, Deepika Bahri, Anna Bernard, Elleke Boehmer, Bill Boelhower, Timothy Brennan, Louis Brenner, Jim Catano, Kate Chedgzoy, Patrick Corcoran, Tim Cribb, Selwyn Cudjoe, Bo Ekelund, Ziad Elmarsafy, Jed Esty, Erik Falk, Charles Forsdick, Bridget Fowler, Keya Ganguly, Priyamvada Gopal, Helena Grice, Abdulrazak Gurnah, Faye Hammill, Nicholas Harrison, Stefan Helgesson, Tom Hickey, Elaine Hobby, Lyn Innes, David Johnson, Suvir Kaul, Gerri Kimber, Kai Kresse, Andrew Lawrence, Ania Loomba, Michelle Masse, Scott McCracken, V. Y. Mudimbe, David Murphy, Christine O'Dowd-Smyth, Kwadwo Osei-Nyame, Ranka Primorac,

Acknowledgements

ix

Lyn Pykett, Pallavi Rastogi, Caroline Rooney, Michael Rossington, Anna Rupprecht, Keith Sandiford, Andrew Smith, Rob Spencer, Luke Thurston, Christopher Warnes, Tim Woods, and Asia Zgadzaj.

I am deeply indebted to friends and colleagues with whom I have spent many hours in discussion about postcolonial studies, literature, cultural theory, and politics. I have learned a very great deal from these conversations, which I have treasured also for the fellowship and intellectual solidarity they have offered. For twenty years now, Benita Parry has been so valued and close an interlocutor of mine that she stands as prima inter pares in this regard. Tim Brennan, Keya Ganguly, Priya Gopal, John Marx, A. Sivanandan, and Khachig Tölölyan have also been central to the formation and development of my ideas in this book, and I thank them for their comments as well as their friendship. I must also thank in particular my colleagues in the Warwick Research Collective (or WReC, as we like to call ourselves), who continue to bring new ideas and new material to my attention, as we attempt, together, to come up with a plausible theory of ‘world literature’: Nick Lawrence, Graeme MacDonald, Pablo Mukherjee, Benita Parry, Stephen Shapiro, Sharae Deckard, Rashmi Varma, and Michael Gardiner. My thanks also to friends who have read and commented on parts of this book, or who have contributed, in discussion, to its development, and especially to Bashir Abu-Manneh, Tim Bewes, Fran Bartkowski, Crystal Bartolovich, Michael Bell, Bo Ekelund, Gregory Elliott, John Fletcher, Sean Homer, Peter Mack, and David Savran.

It has been my privilege, over some twenty-five years now, to have worked with some extraordinarily brilliant and intellectually audacious graduate students – at Warwick and, before that, at Brown University in the United States. The fact that so many of these wonderful students should have gone on to make names for themselves in the academy has given me enormous pleasure. I must thank the following, in particular, for the significant contributions that they have made to the development of the ideas in this book, whether through direct feedback or indirectly, through their own, increasingly important, writing: Sadia Abbas, Mai Al-Nakib, Anthony Arno, Norbert Bugeja, William Clarke, Nicholas Daly, Sharae Deckard, Steven Evans, Rosemary Marangoly George, Elisa Glick, James Graham, SORCHA Gunne, Pranav Jani, Leila Kamali, Touria Khannous, Motochika Kusaka, Lucienne Loh, John Marx, Malachi McIntosh, Kerstin Oloff, Jane Poyner, Nagesh Rao, Robert Spencer, Juliette Taylor-Batty, Jennifer Terry, and Claire Westall.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank the British Arts and Humanities Research Council for awarding me a grant under their Research Leave Scheme in 2009, that enabled me to bring this book to completion. I must also thank my copy-editor at Cambridge University Press, Hilary Hammond, with whom it has been a pleasure to work. I am grateful to Malcolm Read, for finding and proposing a suitable cover image for this book.

My greatest debt is to my family, in the UK and in South Africa, who have given me unconditional love and support when I have most needed it in recent years. Their love has immeasurably enriched my life, and I dedicate this book to them.

Thanks are due to the following publications, in which earlier drafts of limited parts of this book have appeared. In all cases, the previously published material has been substantially reworked here.

New Formations, 59 (2006); Neil Lazarus (ed.), The Cambridge Companion to Postcolonial Studies (2004); European Legacy, 7.6 (2002); Ania Loomba, Suvir Kaul, Matti Bunzl, Antoinette Burton, and Jed Esty (eds), Postcolonial Studies and Beyond (Duke University Press, 2005); Douglas Kellner and Sean Homer (eds), Fredric Jameson: A Critical Reader (Palgrave, 2004); Journal of African Cultural Studies, 17.1 (2005); Historical Materialism, 14.4 (2006); Research in African Literatures, 36.3 (2005).